including whether he was an administrator at the Perry County Public Health Department.

Corbett said he had no intention of turning of his resume, as stated in an email to Ford County Board Chairman Rick Bowen and states attorney Jim Devine and read by Copas.

Kirk Allen of the Edgar County Watchdogs said he's only found a few records from the Perry County Health Department in Pinckneyville and between 2005-07 where Corbett signed as deputy administrator.

Corbett told the Times-Republic he was hired as a deputy and was promoted to administrator Jan. 4, 2006, as stated by the promotion's approval letter from the Illinois Department of Public Health.

"I've offered to give them the promotion letter and a transcript of my (masters) degree," he said.

The Ford Iroquois Public Health Department website's news release dated March 3, 2008, announcing Corbett's hiring states "Mr. Corbett's educational background includes a bachelor's degree in Anthropology/pile, giving them to staff and family without prescriptions or approval from the nurse in charge of the program.

Also dealing with personnel, Copas said the finance coordinator's job description was changed during Corbett's tenure in the first job description, a bachelor's degree Sociology from Westminster College in 1986 and a master's degree in Public Health and Epidemiology from Saint Louis University School of Public Health in 2003.

"A native of Bellville, Illinois, Mr. Corbett comes to the health department following a three and one half year tenure as Administrator for the Perry County Health Department in Pinckneyville, Illinois since 2004. Corbett has numerous accomplishments as Public Health Administrator at Perry County Health Department including the creation of a trained emergency response volunteer registry and initiation of the first Farmer's Market nutrition education community event that was featured as a documentary story on PBS. Perry County Health Department was also selected as an American Heart Association award winner under his direction for a program called START and received national recognition in the Wall Street Journal in September of 2007."

Corbett contends all grants monies have been allocated to the proper people or program.

One claim Copas talked about at the meeting was $500 given to a personal vendor and the same claim number was also used on for a Walmart receipt. There were also numerous FEMA grant and solar panel grants mention by Copas.

Corbett said the attorney general's office has met with local officials about many of the items Copas has spoke about and "The AG's office has not found any wrong doing."

Copas also mentioned some questionable things he claims Corbett has handwritten and emailed.

Corbett said he has "no recollection" of the handwritten note and the email.

"If there was something really wrong, why hasn't there been anything about me in the past. It's been a 30 year career," he said.

Corbett's contract with the FIPHD is up for renewal in November and, he said, he would like have the contract renewed.

"There's a lot of benefits, insider benefits if you are a member of the public health department — if you're special, not everybody," said Copas.

Copas again talked about the health department's solar panel project and its award-
