

I wish I could put into words my disgust at what I have seen and the lack of prosecution for blatant criminal acts that have cost tax payers hundreds of thousands of dollars. Justice is for some and not for others; it depends on who you are, what you have, or who you know. The moral responsibility of government officials and employees to serve the public and not their self-interest has failed. Once you hear the forensic report and see what you as a tax payer paid for, it should be a no brainer to implement an IT policy that would ensure this conduct never happens again, and anyone caught would be terminated immediately. What you will find is there will be opposition to a policy like this because similar things are going on in other departments. I can tell you one department spends time scheduling ball games another department needed immediate internet repair and what did they do? Watched a ball game, no accountability. An atmosphere that condones such conduct from leadership on down is unacceptable. What bothers me more is that in the evidence time and time again there is reference to God by those who perpetuated the wrong doing. To speak of God and hold him high with one breath and steal from your fellow man with another is beyond belief. In my opinion when you use government property for your personal gain, personal use, or benefit you just as well rob me at gun point. I see no difference except that you steal from the shadows. Recent political ads said 97% of Illinoians want corruption fixed. I agree, except we want it to be fixed somewhere else not here because it will affect someone we know. For those who have said nothing was wrong hopefully your eyes will open although there always will be a few that will still turn a blind eye. The tax payers are owed a huge apology from all those who supported and defended the theft of value and paid time by government employees; I doubt that many will offer their apology. So I offer my apology to the tax payers for the theft of your money and value and the lack of prosecution for such conduct.
